TL;DR:

- ✓ Michael Saylor just made his smallest BTC purchase yet – classic local bottom signal
- ✓ For years I've warned that stablecoins are the next big U.S. weapon
- ✓ What we're seeing now (companies + funds launching stable$) is just the prelude to a dollar supercycle
- ✓ $ Hyperinflation + Roaring Twenties – the scenario isn't an accident, it's by design

Saylor: Smallest Buy = Local Bottom?

Michael Saylor recently bought just 196 BTC (~$22.1M) at ~$113,000/BTC.

It's his smallest purchase of the current cycle, compared to the thousands of BTC he scooped up at previous lows.

What does that mean?

Usually when “smart money” buys less, it’s not a lack of conviction.

It’s a signal the market is bottoming locally.

In other words: big money is already loaded. What’s left are just “drops” being added, since the real stacking happened lower.

 Stablecoin Supercycle – I wrote about this back in 2023

Headlines like “companies and funds launching stablecoins” are everywhere.

The question is: why is the U.S. allowing it?

They can't pump trillions through the old banking system anymore → but they can do it digitally, through apps and the internet.

That's what I called, as early as 2024, the Stablecoin Supercycle.

The Dollar – America's Most Profitable Product

The dollar is no longer just America's currency – it's becoming a global app.

Even “tribes in Sudan” will soon be able to access USD directly, as long as they have internet.

What does that mean?

A flood of dollars.

Think back: in 2020 they tested it with “only” $9 trillion – a pilot package.

Now they're building the full version.

More stablecoins → more access → more global demand → hyperinflation and Roaring Twenties, by design.

Strategic Context

Saylor's small buys → sign the “big players” are fully loaded.

Stablecoins going mainstream → sign the global dollar supplier is expanding its market.

If you've been here since 2023, you already know the playbook:

- Flood of digital dollars
- Global demand
- Hyperinflation
- Reset
- New speculative cycle

Conclusion

When you see micro BTC buys at bottoms and stablecoins being launched everywhere, it's no coincidence.

It's the setup for the next big cycle.

The real question isn't "will it happen?"

It's "are you positioned correctly?"
